

World War II (Tube Stations)

During the World War 2, the underground / tube stations played vital roles. The tube stations were used for various purposes.
e.g.

- ▶ Thousands of people used the tube stations as shelter and some people would even squat in the tunnels to sell prime spots to the highest bidders.

Several stations were converted to manufacture aircrafts components and other items for the war.

- ▶ The Government used certain tube stations for its administrative offices for the military. For example,

- ▶ The Brompton Road tube station was used for the first anti-aircraft division to defend the city.